Research is clear: building trust with families and students increases student academic success. At the same time, research also shows that administrators and educators are struggling more than ever to build that trust.

Join national nonprofit PowerMyLearning for a practical session as we answer: what conditions do K-12 leaders need to build trusting relationships with students and families to ensure every child has what they need to thrive?

During the 45-minute interactive session, you'll have the opportunity to:

1. Discuss how culturally responsive education is central to trusting relationships.

2. Explore best practices and ready-to-use resources for strengthening educators' relationships with students and families.
3. Unpack research-based and proven solutions for supporting equitable family engagement at your school or district.

"For many, trust is intangible, ethereal, unquantifiable. If it remains that way, then people don't know how to get their arms around it or how to improve it. But the fact is, the costs of low trust are very real, they are quantifiable, and they are staggering."
