I am sorry I missed this email. I understand and respect your opinion; however, your statement regarding his effort, I find unnecessary. He fell behind in several courses, and we decided with advice from counselors, for him to focus on one subject at a time, so as to finish completely what he can instead of halfway finishing all. It just so happens that the last course to work on was world history, which he thought may be his easiest course, due to it being his favorite course in middle school. He did in fact, make a HUGE effort to recover, but, unfortunately, he did run out of time. I am fine for him to retake semester 1 next year, and am quite confident he will do magnificently.

Have a nice day.

Ms. Moore,

As of January 7th, he was at 14% completed for 9W1 and hadn't worked on the course since December 18th and he was at 25% completed for 9W2 and last worked on it on January 3rd. Therefore, I am not extending the 2nd quarter/1st semester for [REDACTED] in World History. I am making this decision because he is well below half-way finished with work in both quarters and he did not make the necessary effort it required to complete these courses in a timely manner, and I have no guarantee that he will complete last semester's work with his current workload in the new semester. I think it is best for him to take care of the first semester in credit recovery and focus solely on his work for the 2nd semester.

Thank you,

Good morning,

[REDACTED] and I are looking at Edgenuity and his grades on Skyward. I see the work for Q1 and Q2 is still open and he has Incompletes. Are you extending his time to complete this work; or is this something that he will need to retake over the summer? Credit recovery? Obviously, we have never had this problem before.

Thank you,

Amanda Moore
